FUND COMMENTARY

The Treasury curve steepened by 7 basis points (0.07%) in the 1-5 year space throughout the quarter as short-end Treasury yields rose with rate policy expectations. At their highly anticipated September meeting, the Federal Reserve left rates unchanged, though they indicated that they could begin tapering asset purchases before year-end. Northern Trust believes the Fed will deliver fewer rate increases— and later— than market pricing suggests. The ongoing debate in Washington over Congress raising the debt ceiling and the infrastructure bill, as well as uncertainty over Federal Reserve Chair Powell being re-nominated for the position amidst focus on the Federal Reserve President's trading activities, impacted investor sentiment towards the end of the quarter. However, demand remained strong and short end credit spreads as measured by the Bloomberg 1-3 Year option adjusted spread (OAS) were unchanged at 32 basis points (0.32%), quarter over quarter.

The Fund slightly underperformed its benchmark in the quarter. The Fund was overweight both U.S. high yield and investment grade credit, the greatest contributors to returns for the quarter. The Fund was also overweight securitized securities. Asset backed securities and mortgage backed securities contributed to performance, though the Fund's allocation to commercial mortgage backed securities detracted from performance. The Fund's duration was longer than that of its benchmark, which detracted slightly from performance as short and mid-term yields rose.
